

A Blogger's Prayer

Lord, I thank you for my blog and allowing me to write
So that I may bless others as I walk by faith not sight.

I only ask that as I do so my focus would not be
To gain a multitude of followers, but just to follow Thee.

May my delight not be in each person who subscribes,
But as my heart submits to you, seek an eternal prize.

I pray the platform grown would please the audience of One,
And rather than look to me, each seek above all Your Son.

Since the only tribe worth belonging to is the tribe that You lead,
I know full well that apart from you, nothing can succeed.

Remind me that each link should lead to words tested and true,
And that the most crucial link to cultivate is the one I have with You.

While my header may be pretty, fashionable and sweet,
You are Head of this site; it's you whom visitors greet.

Teach me as I compile each post, thinking of another
That the posts I occupy firstly are those of wife and mother.

Although the pages on my blog contain words I want to note,
Let me not neglect the pages of the very book You wrote.

As my words are seen and read across the Blogosphere,
May my desire be, above all, to worship You right here.

Amen.
